MANAGER COMMENTARY

With corporate results season in full swing we are getting an overview of the performance of the global economy from the point of view of individual businesses. A few key themes are emerging. One is that revenue growth is possible and many businesses saw an accelerating positive trend through 2017. For consumer companies such as Luxottica, the world's leading sunglasses brand owner and manufacturer, this is down to improving economic & consumer sentiment alongside their individual marketing efforts. Technology-driven firms like Intel, Microsoft and Cisco are starting to see the rewards from research and development investments made over many years, and the related demand for new products. Intel for example is seeing strong interest in its data centre-related chips, having invested heavily in the high performing processor capabilities required for cloud applications. Often this comes on the back of a strong incumbent business that funds the innovation. For Intel, it is a dominant position in PCs (the market for which remains stable), and Cisco uses its traditional switching and routing business (the plumbing behind the internet) to fund expansion into cloud technologies including security. Innovation is key to maintaining any competitive position, and businesses across industries from consumer goods to healthcare need to consistently adapt to the changing competitive picture. Other themes affecting results are specific regulatory or legislative measures on firms or the markets in which they operate. An important example of this is the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act in the USA, which is causing US-based firms to re-assess the uses of the cash they hold overseas, and is impacting the short and prospective long-term results of most businesses that operate in America. Elsewhere there are regional effects, such as the impact changes to tax law in France that affected recruiter Adecco.

The TB Evenlode Investment Funds are subject to normal stock market fluctuations and other risks inherent in such investments. The value of your investment and the income derived from it can go down as well as up, and you may not get back the money you invested, you should therefore regard your investment as medium-to-long term.
