MANAGER COMMENTARY

We have seen the start of the full year 2018 results season, with reporting companies giving an indication as to how they have fared and painting a picture of how they are seeing the world. So far results have been reasonably solid, but as ever there are many moving parts. In the consumer goods sector, Evenlode Global Income's largest, multinational companies like P&G and Henkel are turning out revenue growth of low-to-mid single digits. Below the top line, there is a tension between controlling costs and investing in operational and capital expenditure to lay the path for future growth. Henkel have decided to increase their investments behind brands and innovations, and in moving the business towards the new world of digital marketing and distribution. We like to see firms committing to evolving their businesses, and whilst the share price reacted negatively to the news of extra expenditure we have responded by building further into the fund's position. In the world of healthcare, pharmaceutical companies such as Roche are earning revenues from newly launched drugs, offsetting declines from older medicines that have come off patent. Finally, information technology is an interesting area. Whilst companies that supply the semiconductor industry are reporting a slowdown, portfolio firms like Intel and Microsoft are seeing strong demand for their products addressing the cloud, in hardware and software respectively. The newest addition to the portfolio is US technology consultancy and outsourcer Accenture. The company helps the world's largest businesses to develop their strategies and execute the technology-driven areas of their business. The company has seen good demand in recent years but with some recent deceleration in revenue growth the share price has declined to a point where we believe a small position is warranted within the fund.
