MANAGER COMMENTARY

During August we engaged in some portfolio activity with the smaller holdings in the TB Evenlode Global Income fund. We exited two businesses, US payroll and HR outsourcer Paychex, and global pharmaceutical giant Novartis, both of which made up around one percent of the portfolio. This position size represents the minimum we usually hold in a company in order to maintain focus in the best combination of quality and value in the portfolio. Upwards price movements meant there was an opportunity to sell the positions and recycle the proceeds into better valued businesses elsewhere. This was a purely financial decision, and both remain excellent companies.

We used the proceeds to invest in a company new to the portfolio: Henkel, a German consumer goods and industrial conglomerate. Henkel has three areas of operation. The largest division is Adhesive Technologies, accounting for a little under a half of revenues, which focuses on industrial applications such as transportation and electronics (70% of the world's smartphones contain Henkel adhesives). The products are tailored to the specific needs of the customer, such as weight or heat reduction, which makes the business (if you'll pardon the pun) 'sticky'. The second largest division by sales is Laundry & Home, generating a third of revenues. This division produces well-known brands such as Persil and Purex, and is responsible for an astonishing 25 billion wash loads per year. The third division is Beauty, selling household names like Schwarzkopf hair care products. Here, Henkel is partnering with Silicon Valley majors on data-driven marketing.

What are the Risks?

As a concentrated equity portfolio of typically less than 40 investments, the fund can involve higher risk and higher volatility. The value of an investment and the income from it can fall as well as rise as a result of market and currency movement; you may not get back the amount originally invested. You should therefore regard your investment as medium-to-long term. Details on the risk factors are included in the fund's prospectus, available on our website.
