

TB EVENLODE GLOBAL EQUITY

MONTHLY FACTSHEET all data as at 31 October 2021 unless otherwise indicated

MANAGER COMMENTARY

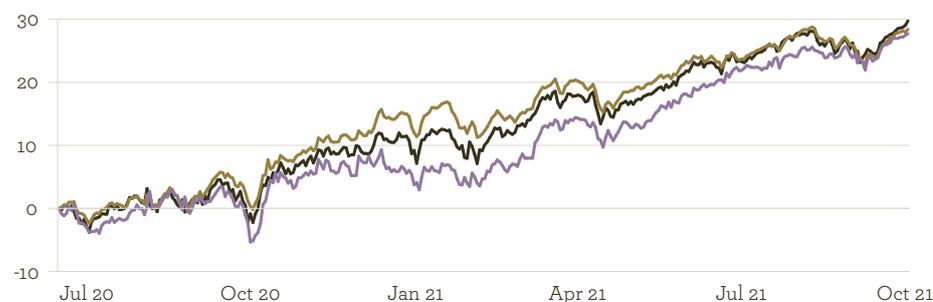

The Fund had a reasonably positive return in October although somewhat behind its comparator benchmark, the MSCI World Index. There were no new positions or exits from existing positions during the month. We used the period in the run up to the third quarter reporting season to do deeper research work into existing holdings and potential new names. Overall, third quarter results so far have been encouraging for our holdings, with plenty of evidence for our preferred themes of organic growth and reinvestment.

The beginning of the reporting season allowed us to add to some positions on what we decided was unjustified weakness. In particular, the payments networks were weak in the month, and we modestly expanded our Mastercard and Visa positions. Their results were positive, with healthy volume and revenue growth. Payments activity continues to recover from last year's global lockdown at an irregular pace, as Covid continues to cause periodic regional lockdowns. As far as we could tell, their share price weakness was driven by three factors, of escalating seriousness:

The first was concern on the pace of the return of higher-margin cross-border payments, which have been held back by regional lockdowns. We don't see this sequencing issue as being material to the stocks. Secondly, US regulators indicated they are looking into historic payments by Visa to certain 'fintech' partners. While this may lead to some action, in our view it is unlikely that regulators will force through changes which permanently reset relationships with partners such as issuers and acquirers. Both payments networks pay very material contra-revenue incentives, adding up to about $15bn a year between them, which we believe are important high-margin income for many key partners. These flows are above and incremental to the interchange fees and other fees which are set by the networks but collected by their partners. Revisiting this structure could materially change the economics of consumer payments as partners would need to shore up their P&Ls from other sources.

Lastly, there are persistent theories that novel fintech issuers will realise the long-meditated dream of switching consumer-to-business payments flows away from card-based transactions to bank account-based transactions. Certainly, the share prices of new entrants have generally been much stronger than those of the established networks. While this would be very material to the networks, there are serious problems with account-based transactions, specifically the lack of fraud protection. Adding the fee structures required to fund dispute resolution yields prices for merchants which are similar to those of conventional debit cards. From our work, the share of consumer fintech payments enabled by the networks has stayed stable over the last few years. We continue to watch this space closely.

Integration into the investment process

Our ESG risk score matrix asks our investee companies 35 ESG-related questions covering issues such as board-level oversight of climate-related issues, material controversies in the supply chain, alignment of performance metrics with company strategy and ownership rights. Once we have taken the industry context into account and identified the key material E, S or G issues, the weighted score is adjusted upwards or downwards. Companies with a high score are reflected positively in their maximum position size, as we feel they are better equipped to anticipate and manage long-term risks.
