MANAGER COMMENTARY

Markets continued to be volatile in June, with growing investor concerns over inflation and the consequences of tightening monetary policy. This led to a rapid sell-off in the latter half of the month, with further weakness in the technology sector and a minor reversal of gains in the energy and commodities sectors. Evenlode Global Income declined but was more resilient than its comparator benchmark, the MSCI World Index. This relative outperformance was driven by a higher exposure to classically defensive stocks, primarily in the healthcare and consumer staples sectors. We do not hold positions in these companies as a macro-hedge, but instead on their ability to generate streams of steady and growing cash flow. These businesses, which include Roche, PepsiCo and Nestlé, offer products that are valued by their customers and commit to ongoing investment. It is these characteristics that will drive long-term performance, whatever economic scenario they encounter.

We were unusually active in the month, establishing three new positions. We invested in two Testing, Inspection and Certification (TIC) companies, SGS and Intertek. This is a market we understand well, as we already hold a position in Bureau Veritas. While all three companies share significant overlap, they each have areas of speciality. SGS dominates inspection of resources and commodities, with an unrivalled network of examiners and testing equipment across the globe. Intertek is biased towards consumer products, undertaking the testing required by regulators to certify a product before general sale. Both have been affected by declining expectations for the global economy but are exposed to encouraging long-term trends, which include increased regulation and the diversification of supply chains. Our final new position was in the French cosmetics giant, L'Oréal. The company's share price has not been immune to the recent macro worries, with fears that inflation will affect consumers' ability to pay for premium products. However, L'Oréal has an excellent brand portfolio, pricing power and a record of revenue resilience in prior downturns. The company will continue to invest in marketing and R&D through any market weakness, enabling it to emerge stronger than peers.

It is difficult to predict the upcoming macro-environment and whether a recession will follow in the latter half of the year. We await the upcoming July results season with anticipation of further volatility and revisions of investor and management expectations. As a result, this may create further opportunities to invest in high quality businesses with attractive long-term opportunities for growth.

Integration into the investment process

Our approach to voting is investment-led and governs our engagement and escalation strategies. Our voting policy has historically centred on four main themes: board composition, alignment of (sustainability-related) incentives with long-term (climate and/or net zero) strategy, shareholder rights and disclosure. We believe board members should have the right set of skills, experience, and psychological attributes, plus sufficient independence to challenge management teams. For high impact companies, knowledge of ESG matters is essential. Incentives drive behaviour and should be aligned with the long-term strategic direction, including climate strategy. We support and defend minority shareholders' rights including the right to receive good quality, timely reporting; that reflects the board's strategic thinking and financial reports. This year, our voting policy places further emphasis on sustainability and our net zero commitment.

Our ongoing commitment

Evenlode Investment Management became a signatory to the United Nations Principles for Responsible Investment (UNPRI) in 2018.
