MANAGER COMMENTARY

After a period of some activity, we made no material changes to the portfolio in May, though there was some action in the equity market which is worthy of a little dissection. Having discussed the relative strength of the consumer goods sector in last month's commentary, the sector has paused for breath and fell in the month whilst the wider market rose slightly. As consumer goods is the biggest sector for the portfolio this represented the biggest detractor from returns relative to the market in May, although remains positive over longer time periods.

The resurgence of information technology companies gathered pace after a difficult 2022, driven on by excitement about a new generation of AI applications and services. We have no doubt that these services will become increasingly embedded into consumer and business life in the fullness of time, and portfolio holdings such as Microsoft and Accenture are at the business end of delivering them. Broader market enthusiasm for the AI theme has propelled other non-portfolio companies such as chipmaker NVIDIA higher, meaning that while the sector has been positive for the fund, it has been a drag on performance relative to the comparator benchmark MSCI World Index. Equally, the shift in market focus has meant some other software and data businesses such as Wolters Kluwer have been weaker having posted strong returns earlier in the year.

Meanwhile, in the physical world the energy and materials sectors have continued to be weak following positive performance last year as energy prices have declined and there are more concerns about global economic growth. The financials sector has continued to be weak following the difficulties at some institutions such as Credit Suisse earlier in the year. As the fund has no exposure to energy companies, banks or insurers these trends have been positives for relative performance.

Integration into the investment process

Every year, Evenlode assesses the carbon emissions financed by its investments, aiming to gain a deeper understanding of the climate impact and regulatory risks in the face of increasing consumer pressure for climate transition. Our Portfolio Emissions Report for 2022 states that we have achieved an overall reduction of 7.2% in emissions per £10k invested across our investment portfolios. This signifies a decrease from 2.33 to 2.16 tCO₂e. Notably, this reduction was primarily driven by a significant 25.2% decrease in emissions per £10k invested for our largest fund, Evenlode Income, which constitutes 64.6% of our total assets under management. The emissions associated with a £10k investment in any of our funds ranged from 1.00 to 2.98 tCO₂e. To put this in context, the average UK resident was responsible for 5.15 tCO₂e in 2021¹.
