MANAGER COMMENTARY

March saw in the tail end of corporate reporting season, with results reflecting positively on the global economy. The trend was particularly noticeable in the capital goods sector where expanding production of new technologies like flat panel displays has led to increasing demand. Whilst some of the performance is very much cyclical, it has confirmed a cautiously optimistic tone coming from companies around the world. Given this backdrop, the return of volatility to global equity markets in February and March stands in direct contrast. Increasingly protectionist rhetoric is emanating from the Trump administration and its trade nemesis, China, which may go some way to explaining more jittery stock markets. There is also the simple fact that markets have been going up for a long time, and have been unusually placid over the last couple of years – neither of those characteristics is ‘business as usual’ for shares. The Information Technology sector has been in focus, with a sense of nervousness particularly around the ‘FANGs’ – Facebook, Amazon, Netflix & Google. 16% of the Evenlode Global Income portfolio is invested in technology firms, such as Microsoft in software and Intel in hardware. These businesses meet our criteria of having defendable competitive positions, stable cash flows and strong balance sheet. Along with the rest of the portfolio we believe businesses with these characteristics will prosper in the long run even if the economy follows the stock market downwards in the shorter term.
