MANAGER COMMENTARY

Global stock markets were strong during the month of May, generally rising across a broad range of sectors. The performance of the MSCI World index and Evenlode Global Income was driven by the digital technology sector. Having been out of favour earlier in the year market participants seemed happy to retrace steps back upwards with firms like Apple, Intel and Microsoft. Conversely, other sectors such as consumer goods have lagged in recent months and not particularly rebounded. The resultant valuation changes have meant that we have incrementally reduced the technology allocation in the fund and increased the weighting towards consumer goods at the margin. The main event in the portfolio during May was the initiation of a holding in French advertising & communications company Publicis. There are currently two worries that have depressed the advertising sector. One is the effects of a shift away from traditional media such as television towards online marketing, where there are more tools available to individual advertisers and more transparent pricing. Publicis has been pro-active in dealing with this secular shift by building its new business model around its digital offering, particularly since it acquired Sapient three years ago, and through operating a 'pass through' pricing model for online space. The other worry is that some multinational companies are in-sourcing some services, like media buying, that have historically been the domain of the large agencies. We believe that this trend is real but to an extent cyclical, as firms need to bring in external expertise as the advertising landscape shifts. In our estimation the current valuation of Publicis is attractive, even given these worries, and it has evolved its strategy to reflect the new advertising world order.
