MANAGER COMMENTARY

The fund price drifted lower in August as share prices generally weakened after a strong start to the year, albeit with a small rally at month end. The downward move was potentially catalysed by a cautious tone being struck by companies as they looked out to the second half of the year when reporting on first half performance. The operating environment is normalising following the disruptions of the coronavirus pandemic, the war in Ukraine, and associated inflation. Margins and cash flows are on an improving trajectory. However, expectations are for revenue growth to slow as the impacts of inflation and rising interest rates begin to be felt in the economy. Within the portfolio the health care sector was relatively weak for company-specific reasons. Medical laboratory operator Sonic Healthcare is seeing covid testing volumes fall as expected. Medical equipment maker Siemens Healthineers continued to feel the effects of supply chain disruption, with its Varian oncology treatment division experiencing delays in getting equipment out of the factory door due to previous disruption to inputs.

Conversely the information technology sector was positive in absolute and relative terms. Consultancies and outsourcers Accenture and Capgemini experienced positive sentiment having reported results in the prior months. Networking equipment and software provider Cisco saw sales rebound following supply chain challenges last year, and the share price reacted positively. Microsoft drifted lower but outperformed the market. However, geospatial technology specialist Hexagon declined following criticisms from a short seller. Some of the points raised centre on corporate governance, something we have already identified and discussed with the company directly. We continue to believe that the overall investment case is sound. Share prices drifting lower means that valuations are commensurately a little more appealing, and our measures indicate that the medium-term risk/return balance is comfortable for long-term minded investors.

Integration into the investment process

We actively engage with portfolio companies to drive their progress towards achieving net-zero emissions, recognising that this is where our influence can make the most significant contribution to decarbonising the economy. Engagement is a fundamental aspect of our stewardship strategy, which we believe adds value for both parties involved. It helps us gain a deeper understanding of their business context and their efforts to mitigate and build resilience against the perceived risks. While our goal is to create long-term value for our clients by enhancing the sustainability profile of these companies, we acknowledge that this transformation takes time and a measured approach. To ensure the effectiveness of our engagements, we set specific objectives for each interaction, allowing us to monitor progress and gather important data to improve our engagement methods over time.
