MANAGER COMMENTARY

Global equity markets signalled renewed optimism in November with their third major rally of the year, this time led by cyclical stocks. We correspondingly lagged the market, as we would have expected given the rally's composition. Given a generally gloomy macro prognostication for the year ahead, we cannot know whether the recent market performance is the first tentative sign of a longer recovery or another false start. However, we remain confident that the cash generative and asset light businesses in the Evenlode Global Opportunities portfolio are well positioned to perform across a wide range of economic scenarios.

During the month we exited the portfolio's position in the American video games developer, Electronic Arts (EA). The company has performed resiliently over the past year, with the share price supported by rumours of a potential acquisition following Microsoft's announced purchase of rival developer Activision. EA's fundamental performance has also been encouraging, with revenues continuing to grow despite a notable softening in the mobile gaming market. However, profitability is becoming increasingly dependent on the EA Sports FC franchise (formerly known as FIFA) and microtransactions linked to the franchise. The combination of this increased risk and declining relative value has convinced us to reinvest the capital elsewhere.

This provided the opportunity to establish a new position in S&P Global. The company is one of the three leading US credit rating agencies that provide credit quality assessments for fixed income products. This service adds significant value to bond issuers, with rated debt instruments attracting a 30-50bps reduction in interest payable (at a cost of 7bps). The recent rapid increase in US interest rates has temporarily reduced debt issuance, leading to a 25% year-to-date fall in rating revenues for S&P. This cyclicity is partially offset by the stability and growth of S&P's data products. Even so, we integrate this risk into our approach by valuing the company conservatively and limiting our maximum position size. This allows us the confidence to initiate a position in the portfolio and take advantage of the sharp price decline of this quality franchise year-to-date.

As ever, we would like to thank all our investors for their trust and backing, and we continue to focus our efforts on preserving and growing your capital.

Integration into the investment process

We independently analyse and vote on all resolutions at every AGM of an investee company. The voting of resolutions followed by active engagement is the formal mechanism by which we believe we can effect change and express opinion on corporate matters. In some cases we vote against the recommendations of management where there is a considered reason for doing so, for example if remuneration policies did not assess management on managing climate-related risks and/or reduction of greenhouse gas emissions in their operations or supply chain. When we do vote against a management recommendation, we write to the company explaining why and build the conversation into an engagement plan, as appropriate.

Our ongoing commitment

Signatory of:

Evenlode Investment Management became a signatory to the United Nations Principles for Responsible Investment (UNPRI) in 2018. By becoming signatories, we commit to implementing these principles and incorporating environmental, social and governance factors into our investment process to help enhance returns and better manage risk for our clients.
