MANAGER COMMENTARY

Evenlode Global Opportunities was up in October, but materially lagged its comparator benchmark, the MSCI World Index. The Fund is now also behind its comparator benchmark year-to-date. Our relative weakness was partly driven by sector exposure, as bank financials, energy, and healthcare were all strong, and partly by individual company exposure. Many companies were weak on objectively healthy results, leading to some startling and apparently illogical dispersion in share prices. Take, for example, Microsoft (16% constant currency [cc] sales growth, 15% cc operating profit growth) versus Visa (20% cc sales growth, 15% cc operating profit growth); the first down 4% for the month, the second up 13%.

It's helpful to step back here and consider the tension between our goal of long-term capital appreciation for clients, and the necessary fact that companies dole out trading information in regular three-month bursts. At times like these, it is easy to become hyper-focused on the esoterica of quarterly results, such as the change in trends and the performance vs sellside and buy-side consensus expectations. It is equally easy for investors focused on the long term to dismiss the results and their attendant circus as meaningless 'noise'. As usual, we strive for a moderate middle path, as we find quarterlies invaluable for giving us a sense check of how our companies are doing relative to our expectations of them. After all, if you are running a hundred miles across a desert, you will want to take regular compass bearings to make sure you are on course. When we focus on overall operating performance, the results season was solid. Organic revenue in the third quarter of 2022 (i.e. Q3 2022 revenue compared to Q3 2021) grew 12% on a weighted average basis across the portfolio for the 75% of the portfolio which has reported so far this season, comfortably faster than both inflation and consensus expectations of 6% revenue growth for the MSCI World Index in 2022 (FactSet consensus – note that this estimate is net and for the year as a whole, but we are confident the portfolio would also be ahead on any comparable basis). Many of our holdings did not report earnings in the quarter, but we are confident that their pricing power will continue to protect margins.

As ever, we would like to thank all our investors for their trust and backing, and we continue to focus our efforts on preserving and growing your capital.
